DEAR FRIENDS,

“Edible Education” has now entered the mainstream. Our learning model continues to flourish from one simple idea: academic subjects such as math and science become more richly engaging when they are integrated with immersive experiences in kitchens and gardens. As young people are empowered to understand the deep connections between food and every other aspect of life, they develop a sense of global citizenship, a respect for the land, and a determination to nourish themselves and each other.

Thanks to the longstanding support of Chez Panisse, our more recent kinship with dynamic programs such as Michelle Obama’s Let’s Move!, and the generous support of our donors, the Edible Schoolyard Project is at the nexus of an ever-strengthening movement. Our work holds more promise and hope now than ever before.

We are so grateful for your support!

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

THE EDIBLE SCHOOLYARD PROJECT

In 2011, after fifteen years as the Chez Panisse Foundation, we changed our name to the Edible Schoolyard Project to better reflect our mission. We also celebrated the 40th birthday of Chez Panisse Restaurant and Café with a series of wonderful events in support of edible education. And we launched our Edible Schoolyard Network, which for the first time brings together allied efforts from around the country and the world. To date, our network represents more than 2,000 edible education programs, in all 50 American states and 29 other countries.

The Edible Schoolyard Project's seminal approach to teaching children elemental food values and environmental stewardship is now being embraced by health-care experts, environmental advocates, politicians, economists, entrepreneurs, and leaders around the world. They realize that not only our own future hangs in the balance with the current food system, but the planet's as well.

Together, we will create lasting change.

I.
MODELING
the MISSION

the SILK ROAD

◀ FOUR LESSONS IN SIXTH-GRADE HUMANITIES SHOW HOW IDEAS, GOODS, AND FOODS WERE TRADED ALONG THE SILK ROAD, BEGINNING IN 200 B.C.E.

OUR DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM, the Edible Schoolyard Berkeley, is nearing its 20th year of operation. It stands today as a beacon of expertise and mentorship in the burgeoning edible education field.

ESY Berkeley offers a fully integrated, standards-based curriculum at a public middle school. Students in grades six, seven, and eight acquire and apply skills in kitchen and garden classrooms that reinforce and amplify their studies in earth science, mathematics, ecology, biology, history, languages, the humanities, and art.

We provide free distribution of all ESY Berkeley course materials, online at edibleschoolyard.org, for our member programs (including six other Founding Edible Schoolyards that we helped to establish over the last decade). And we invite all programs to share their own lesson plans and resources, via an easy-to-use tool on the site.

Each year, we host about 1,500 visitors on public and private tours of the ESY Berkeley program. Tours include a stop in the school dining commons, where—thanks to a partnership between the Center for Ecoliteracy, the Edible Schoolyard Project, Chef Ann Cooper, and the Berkeley Unified School District—children are served a freshly prepared lunch that includes local and organic products.

To have healthy kids, we need healthy schools—and also healthy communities. At ESY Berkeley, we showcase a range of time-tested activities that help promote wider neighborhood engagement. (Popular examples include plant and produce sales, gardening workshops, and Thanksgiving take-home “kits” with the makings of the family dinner.)

In 2012, we started a pilot project called Family Nights Out, a series of on-site evening classes that provide basic lessons in healthful cooking and shopping for working families. In a video available at edibleschoolyard.org, we offer a representative Family Nights Out sequence, in which students lead their parents, care-givers, and siblings in preparing and sharing a simple, seasonal, delicious meal that is easy to make at home. 🍅

II.
SPREADING
SEEDS

FOR THE LAST FIVE YEARS, we have offered intensive professional development in edible education at the ESY Berkeley site. Our summer ESY Academy covers such topics as garnering support for launching a program; site and soil analysis; garden and kitchen budgets and maintenance; classroom management and lesson planning; staffing and volunteer coordination; and in-kind giving and fundraising strategies. Since its launch, the ESY Academy has welcomed 235 individuals from 143 schools, representing more than 150,000 students nationwide. Demand for trainings far exceeds capacity: in 2012, more than 250 educators applied for 90 spaces, a pattern we saw repeated in 2013.

New for summer 2013 is a special Academy session designed for FoodCorps, a national service nonprofit that places members in schools around the country to work on edible education and school lunch reform initiatives. The ESY Academy training will prepare FoodCorps Fellows (those with one year of experience at a site) to become peer supervisors to incoming members.

The ESY Network invites edible education programs from all over the country and the world to connect with us and each other online. The network makes it possible for educators, administrators, community advocates, and parents to exchange ideas and offer feedback on best practices. Our 2,250 member programs (to date) have proven eager to support and inspire one another.

In 2012, we completed year two of a thriving partnership with UC Berkeley to institutionalize edible education studies at the university level. In collaboration with Michael Pollan and the Graduate School of Journalism, we created an introductory course on the challenges and opportunities of the food system, explored from a variety of perspectives. Classes were open to graduate and undergraduate students as well as members of the public. Guest lecturers have included Eric Schlosser, Marion Nestle, Carlo Petrini, Dan Imhoff, Frances Moore Lappé, and Kelly Brownell. All lectures are available for viewing at edibleschoolyard.org. 🍌

III.

THE EDIBLE SCHOOLYARD PROJECT intends to create, curate, and evaluate curriculum for grades K through 12 and to offer this material—organized into rich, video-enhanced suites of tools—via a dedicated online distribution platform. Curriculum specialists will ensure that we align with the new Common Core standards, which mirror our learning model by emphasizing “whole child” mastery of concepts like interdependency, resilience, and systems thinking.

We will also expand our professional development offerings, building from the FoodCorps prototype, to provide additional Academy sessions and training that is customized to specific locales and circumstances, such as healthcare, childcare, and corporate-wellness initiatives.

We will continually update our ESY Network map as we welcome new programs and expand our support services for members. This first-ever alliance of edible education programs will increasingly engage in information-sharing and become a unified voice on behalf of the integrated learning model and school-lunch reform.

We will move forward with our UC Berkeley course collaboration, editing lecture videos and offering them in the now-standard MOOC format.

Lastly, we will continue to collaborate with new partners, adding them to a roster that currently includes FoodCorps, Whole Kids Foundation (Whole Foods’ nonprofit entity), the National Farm to School Network, Slow Food USA, Slow Food International, Jamie Oliver’s foundations (in the US and the UK), and the Stephanie Alexander Kitchen Garden Foundation (in Australia). ●

THE EDIBLE SCHOOLYARD NETWORK REPRESENTS AND CONNECTS THRIVING PARTNER PROGRAMS IN ALL 50 STATES AND 29 OTHER COUNTRIES.

DISPLACEMENT

◀ IN MATH CLASS, SIXTH-GRADERS OPERATE A CIDER PRESS WHILE ESTIMATING AND CALCULATING VOLUME AND DISPLACEMENT WITH SOLIDS AND LIQUIDS.

ALICE WATERS was already imagining the Edible Schoolyard Project on the day more than 40 years ago when she opened the doors of Chez Panisse and launched the farm-to-restaurant movement. Both endeavors are based upon the conviction that real food can change your life.

Your support is at the heart of this work. So many of you have shared meals at Chez Panisse, joined farm and Edible Schoolyard tours, generously contributed funding, and created a tight-knit community that has literally raised the idea of edible education from the ground up.

All of us at the Edible Schoolyard Project can never thank you enough. We extend our unending gratitude to everyone who participated so joyfully in the events celebrating Chez Panisse's 40th birthday, and are delighted to welcome those who are joining us now. 🍎
